

Competition and Antitrust Law Compliance Reminder

Rockwell Automation's sponsorship of the annual PartnerNetwork Conference substantially benefits all conference participants and is an important part of Rockwell Automation's business relationship with its commercial partners and authorized distributors. However, all participants must remember that although all the organizations participating in this conference are part of Rockwell Automation's PartnerNetwork, many of you also are actual or potential competitors of one another under the law.

Rockwell Automation is committed to strict compliance with all applicable competition and antitrust laws. These laws are intended to promote free and fair competition and to prevent businesses from engaging in practices that limit or otherwise injure competition. To keep this commitment, it is our expectation that all meeting participants will not engage in any activity that may constitute or give rise to an actual or perceived violation of competition or antitrust law.

Participants should not use this meeting or materials as an opportunity to obtain competitive information or to discuss:

- Prices, profits and internal cost information, or participants' expectations as to their future prices or internal costs.
- Dividing markets by product, customer, or geography.
- Limiting the supply of a product or a class of products.
- Excluding competitors from a market; or
- Boycotting or refusing to deal with any competitor, vendor, or supplier.

It is the responsibility of each participant to avoid discussing any improper subjects with a competitor and to inform conference organizers immediately if a participant believes that improper subjects are being discussed. This responsibility extends to all conference activities, including the formal conference sessions, informal discussions and social events.

Your cooperation in this regard is expected and appreciated.
